Knotting - more than just a creative activity

Silk painting

Silk painting is useful in occupational therapy for motor and functional treatment. The simple and fast work means that, if their arms or hands are guided, people with disabilities can also manage quick success. Active arm-hand coordination is improved and the range of movement of the arm is increased thanks to sweeping movements, as are hand motor skills with grasping, e.g. fist closure and the 3-finger grip, fine motor skills and finger dexterity while holding and guiding the brush or threading the beads. The pinch grip and opposing hold are also encouraged, which makes holding a pen easier at a later stage. The brush can be adjusted to suit the mobility and holding abilities of the hand.

Silk painting has a great influence on hand-hand and hand-eye coordination, as well as the coordination between both arms with bi-manual actions. Action planning, concentration, load capacity and enjoyment of movement can all be improved.

Pricking the Fröbelian way

From point → to surface → to solid

The pricking needle makes holes ("points") in a piece of paper, multiple holes create a picture ("surface") and then a special pricking technique creates a 3-dimensional shape ("solid").

What's needed: • pricking felt • paper • pricking needles • scissors • template

Pricking - as we all know it

A sheet of paper is placed on the pricking felt. The outline of a motif is transferred to the paper underneath with the pricking needle, either using a template or your own design. If individual elements are pricked from the back then they look raised and sculptural on the front.

Even better: Pricking the Fröbelian way

Here the outline of the motif is also pricked from the front along the template before you get into the details, in the truest sense of the word. Children are faced with a question: "from which side do I need to prick with the pricking needle to create small bumps on the front?" Making this connection requires cognitive flexibility and spatial imagination. It is also important that the selection of details is left to the children, and that they don't simply start pricking but rather carefully work in a certain rhythm. This encourages fine motor skills and hand-eye coordination. Verbal support can also be offered by an adult, e.g. "look carefully, hit the point, prick the hole - pick up your needle!"

Repetition of the "pricking verses" encourages expressive language in children. Fröbelian pricking encourages attentiveness when using the pricking needle and conveys basic geometrical knowledge through the creation of squares, circles and triangles. Pricking lifeforms such as animals or flowers is also very popular with children. During and after pricking there are many opportunities to start discussions about the shapes being made.

Woven animals

A real eye-catcher and easy to make: Cut out the parts and paper strips, braid the slots and stick the end of the strips together.
